
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The following symposium on “Constitutionalism and Secularism in an Age of Religious Revival: The Challenge of Global and Local Fundamentalisms” is the product of great cooperation and productive interaction among numerous individuals and institutions. Three distinct phases of the project must be singled out: Its conception and elaboration; the live scholarly conference where early drafts of the articles in the Symposium were first presented and thoroughly discussed; and the Herculean editing process that turned the promise of the project into a palpable and enduring reality.

The conception and elaboration of the project were a truly collective endeavor. Thanks to the Blaise Pascal Research Chair administered by the École Normale Supérieure in Paris that I held in 2007-2008 and to funding associated with it, an interdisciplinary group of scholars from a number of countries and legal and religious traditions was able to meet several times in Paris in order to elaborate and craft in great detail the subject-matter of this Symposium. Special thanks are due to my academic host in Paris, the Center of Comparative Law at the University of Paris I (Pantheon-Sorbonne), and to its Director, Professor Helene Ruiz-Fabri, who also acted as the co-convenor of the planning group.

The planning stage was followed by an extraordinarily animated and productive two-day live conference held on October 26 and 27, 2008, at the Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law under the auspices of Cardozo’s Floersheimer Center for Constitutional Democracy. I wish to thank the Center and its Director, Professor Michael Herz, for the encouragement and generous financial support that they provided. Special thanks are also due to Haijing Qiu, the Program Coordinator of Cardozo’s Heyman Center, who lent the Floersheimer Center a crucial helping hand to insure that all organizational details pertaining to this large conference sailed smoothly, and, under her highly capable supervision, they did!

Last, but by no means least, very special thanks are due to the entire staff of the Cardozo Law Review, which handled the most important final publishing phase of the project. I have been fortunate to collaborate with the Review for two decades on several major symposia issues, and have become accustomed to a high standard of excellence and dedication. On this occasion the Review as a whole, and its Editor-in-Chief, Nathaniel Boyer, and its Symposium Editor, Ruth Solomon—both of whom worked closely with me throughout the project—in particular, have certainly more than matched my high expectations. A very special and heartfelt thanks to all the members of the Review!
